

A Historical Background of Chanukah

Some Historical Background

The war of Chanukah occurred in the middle of the era of the Second Bais Hamikdash, in the year 3622 (134 BCE). However, to really appreciate this story, it is helpful to know the historical background of the three hundred years preceding that war.

When the Jewish nation was defeated by Bavel in 3338 (418 BCE), the First Bais Hamikdash was destroyed and Yerushalayim was burned. The Jews who survived the slaughter in Yerushalayim were marched off to Bavel, where they settled in Jewish cities. The seventy-year period between the destruction of the First Bais Hamikdash and the building of the Second Bais Hamikdash is known as galus Bavel. The Babylonian empire lasted another fifty-one years, until it was conquered by the Persian empire, nineteen years before the building of the Second Bais Hamikdash. At this point, Bavel was no longer a kingdom unto itself, but merely another province in the vast Persian empire. All Jews that had previously been under Bavel's dominion now came under Persian rule. The Persian empire consisted of one hundred twenty-seven provinces, and Jews were scattered throughout these provinces.

One year later, a king named Koresh became the emperor of Persia. Koresh had been mentioned explicitly by name in the prophecy of Yeshaya Hanavi. He foretold, about two hundred years in advance, that Koresh would give permission to rebuild the Bais Hamikdash. When Koresh was shown the scroll of Yeshaya, he was willing to comply with Hashem's ancient instructions. In 3390 (366 BCE), he gave permission for any Jew wishing to return to Eretz Yisroel to do so. He also returned the vessels of the Bais Hamikdash, which he had acquired when Bavel was conquered.

The first group that returned to rebuild the Bais Hamikdash and Yerushalayim was led by Zerubavel. Zerubavel was a descendant of Dovid Hamelech, and Koresh appointed him governor of the Province of Yehudah. The trip from Bavel to Eretz Yisroel was dangerous, and there were many foreign peoples living in the land. They resented the arrival of the Jews and the authority they had been given by the king. It was a great sacrifice to make this trip and settle in Eretz Yehudah. The group that went along with Zerubavel was relatively small, because most people were not willing to relinquish the comfort of their homes in Bavel.

It wasn't long before our enemies wrote a slanderous letter to Koresh, accusing the Jews of planning to rebel against him as soon as they would complete the wall of Yerushalayim and the building of the Bais Hamikdash. Koresh believed the slander, and issued an order that all construction must be stopped. This order remained in effect for the rest of Koresh's life, during the entire time that Achashverosh was king, and until the second year of Daryavesh II.

It was during this time that the story of Purim took place. Subsequently, Daryavesh II, a son of Esther and Achashverosh, gave permission for the Jews to rebuild the Bais Hamikdash. He even gave funds to assist in its construction. He stipulated, just as Koresh had done before him, that the first story be built of wood, so that if the Jews would ever rebel against him and try to regain their independence, it would be easy to destroy their Bais Hamikdash by setting it on fire. The Persian empire lasted a total of 54 years until it was defeated by the Greeks.

The Kingdom of Greece

Far away to the west, across the Mediterranean Sea, there was a people that lived on very rocky, mountainous terrain, on the Aegean peninsula and its nearby islands. Today we call this country Greece. At that time, however, these people were divided into many city-states and kingdoms. They did not live in harmony, but were usually warring with each other. Because they were not united, it was easy for King Daryavesh to conquer them and impose taxes on them. One of the kingdoms in the northern part of Greece was called Macedonia. Their king was Philip, who managed to conquer and unify the entire country into one united people. Now that Philip had the entire nation behind him, he turned his attention towards the enemy - Persia. As Philip was engaged in war with Persia, he was killed by one of his assistants, and it seemed that all his efforts would now be thwarted.

Philip had a nineteen-year-old son, whose name was Alexander. Alexander was exceptionally talented at battle, and immediately assumed the leadership of his father's armies. Although vastly outnumbered, his soldiers went to battle against Daryavesh and defeated the Persian army in 3448 (308 BCE). This brought an end to the Persian empire forever.

Doniel's* Visions of the Four Kingdoms

All this history had long been foretold by the prophets, especially Doniel. During Galus Bavel, prophetic visions were shown to Doniel, informing him of the four nations that would enslave the Jewish people. In one vision, he saw four wild animals, each one destroying the one that came before it. Bavel was shown as a lion, Persia as a bear, Greece as a leopard, and the fourth as an awesome animal with iron teeth, which would trample and consume everything in its path. This fourth animal symbolized the mighty, vicious kingdom of Rome.

In his first vision, he was not shown many details about the second and third wild animals. In the second vision, he was shown much greater details about those two nations. This time, they were portrayed in a different form. The second beast was a ram which would gore with its horns, and all the other animals would be unable to stand up to it. This represented Persia, which would be extremely successful in conquering many nations, and amass a huge empire of one hundred and twenty-seven provinces. Doniel prophesied that a he-goat would come from the west so rapidly that it would appear to be flying, without its feet touching the ground. The goat would attack the ram with tremendous rage, and the ram would not have the strength to withstand the attack. This prophecy referred to Alexander and the Greek army.

Alexander's Conquests and Shimon Hatzadik

Alexander travelled far and wide, conquering nation after nation. He amassed a vast empire which spread from Greece all the way to India, and down to Egypt. As soon as Persia was defeated by Greece, all of Persia's possessions automatically came under Grecian rule. In the course of his conquests, Alexander came to Eretz Yisroel. There was no thought of resistance or rebellion; the Greeks were simply too mighty. At that time, the community in Eretz Yisroel was still very young, as the Bais Hamikdash had been built only thirty-four years earlier. They were also living among bitter enemies, the Kusim. (When the ten tribes had been sent into exile almost 240 years earlier, the conquerer Sancheriv, king of Ashur, imported a people called the Kusim to settle Eretz Yisroel. The Kusim had been living there ever since, and bitterly resented the return of the Jews to their ancestral homeland. They were sly and ruthless, and tried to interfere with the rebuilding of Yerushalayim and the Bais Hamikdash in any way that they could, even resorting to violence.)

Now, with the arrival of Alexander, the Kusim found an excellent opportunity to slander the Jewish people. They told Alexander that the Jews were planning a rebellion and did not respect the king. Alexander gave them permission to kill the Jews and do with them as they please. The slander became known to Shimon Hatzadik, who was a grandson of the Kohen Gadol. He dressed himself in the garments of the Kohen Gadol and marched out to meet Alexander, followed by a parade of the most distinguished Jews and young kohanim holding torches. When Alexander saw Shimon Hatzadik, he hurried down off his horse and bowed down to the ground before Shimon. His officers said to him, "A king such as yourself bows before this Jew?!!" He answered them, "Before each victorious battle that I fight, I see a vision of this man leading me into victory." Alexander asked Shimon why he came to him. Shimon answered, "Is it possible that, because of idol worshippers' slander (that we are rebelling against you), you would destroy a house (the Bais Hamikdash) where they pray for you and for the success of your reign? "Who are they?" Alexander asked. "These Kusim who stand near you right now!" said Shimon. Alexander replied that the Jews could punish the Kusim for their treachery in any way they wished. From that time on, Alexander gave power to the Jewish people to rule over the Kusim and deprive them of their independence.

When Alexander was taken on a tour of Yerushalayim and the Bais Hamikdash, he stated his intention to have a statue of himself built in memory of his visit. Of course, it was strictly forbidden to have a statue erected in the Bais Hamikdash! The Jews appeased him by promising that every male child that would be born to the kohanim in the coming year would be named Alexander in his honor.

After Alexander's Death

Although the Yevanim remained in control of Eretz Yisroel for 180 years, Alexander himself reigned for a total of only twelve years. One of his officers put poison in his wine, and he died at the age of thirty-two. As he was dying, he wrote a last will and testament in which he divided his empire into twelve parts. Alexander's wishes were not carried out, and after much fighting the empire was finally split into four parts. The land of Egypt was given to an officer who adopted the name Talmei. The Egyptian kings who followed him were also known by the name Talmei. The second portion consisted of Syria, Bavel, and also the Jewish land of Yehudah. The third was an empire carved out of Persia and eastward into Asia, and the fourth consisted of Greece and Macedonia. Eretz Yisroel was situated right between the southern empire in Egypt and the northern empire in Syria. Therefore, at times the Jews were under the rule of the southern king of Egypt, but sometimes shifted back to the rule of the northern empire in Syria. Not too long after the division of the empire, Talmei defeated the northern kingdom and took the land of Yehudah for himself. (Much later, at the time of the war of Chanukah, the king of the Syrian Greeks to the north was Antiochus, and Eretz Yisroel was in his domain.)

The (Septuagint) תרגום השבעים

Talmei II was a scholar who loved books of all sorts. He had a deep respect for the chachomim and for the Torah, and wanted, more than anything, to be able to study the Torah in Greek. So, he commanded the Kohen Gadol to send him seventy of the greatest chachomim. When they came, he put each one in a separate place and commanded them to translate the Torah into Greek. All the chachomim understood that there are things in the Torah which could not be translated literally for a gentile king, because he would not understand them. He would belittle and make fun of the Torah. Although they could not confer with each other, each of the chachomim altered the text from a literal translation to a loose translation, and all seventy versions were identical! This translation is called the Septuagint, which in Greek means “the translation of the seventy.”

From that time on, the words of the Chumash were accessible to the nations of the world as well as to the Jewish people. Chazal tell us that when the Torah was translated into Greek, darkness settled upon the world for three days. It was considered a tragic time, as sad as the day when Bnei Yisroel made the golden calf. Although we don't begrudge other nations the opportunity to learn from our Torah and be influenced by it, the Torah was greatly cheapened by this translation. Torah is infinite, with an infinite number of meanings and lessons to be learned from each word and every letter. The translation limits the Torah to just one, superficial meaning. Also, the fact that the Torah was now in the hands of the gentiles meant that they could distort it if they wanted to. This they certainly did, in the course of time! The Christian religion is based on a very distorted understanding of the Tanach. Islam also is based, to a great extent, on a distorted view of the Tanach.

The צדוקים

During the period when the Yevanim were in control of Eretz Yisroel, new heretical ideas arose, for the very first time in history. One was the prevalent denial of the belief in Olam Haba. In order to counteract this belief The Men of the Great Assembly decreed that after each bracha in the Bais Hamikdash, the people should respond by blessing Hashem "min ha'olam v'ad ha'olam".

Early in the era of the second Bais Hamikdash, two groups arose that corrupted our mesorah. These were the Tzadokim and Bitussim. The founders of these two groups, Tzadok and Bituss, were talmidim of Anitgnos Ish Socho. When he taught, "Do not be like servants who serve the master with intention of receiving reward," they declared that he meant to say that there is no such thing as an afterlife. Of course, Antignos meant no such thing! He only meant that we should serve Hashem out of love, and not for the reward. However, these two reshaim actually understood from Anitgnos' words precisely that which they wanted to hear. (The belief in the Afterlife is a major hindrance to one who desires to live a life of indulgence and constant partying. After all, if there is an Afterlife, then this world is merely a preparation, a temporary stopover, where we earn our place in eternity. Reward and punishment need not necessarily be meted out in this world, since Hashem has forever to settle the accounts. If, on the other hand, this life is the only existence, and since we see no obvious pattern of reward and punishment, then the only sensible thing to do is to indulge in as many pleasures as we can while we are alive. This was precisely what Tzadok and Beitus wanted to do, so they grabbed at the opportunity to misinterpret Antignus' words to that effect.) Although they claimed to believe in Hashem and in the written Torah, they really did not believe in anything at all. However, they knew that the people would not tolerate them if they told the truth, so they said that they do not believe in the oral Torah and in the right of the chachomim to enact Rabbinic laws. They broke away from the Torah, and their followers became known as Tzadokim and Bitussim. These two groups were greedy and ruthless, with no other interests but money, power, and indulging themselves in the pleasures of this world. They were a constant source of trouble to our people up until the time that the Bais Hamikdash was destroyed.

The New Ruling Class

When the Jewish people were under the Greek-Egyptian rule of Talmei, he demanded that they pay him very heavy taxes. Chonio, a son of Shimon Hatzadik, was a very selfish and irresponsible Kohen Gadol. He refused to bother collecting the taxes for Talmei, even though this posed a threat to national security. Chonio had a nephew named Yosef ben Toviah, who was brilliant and charming, yet sly and without scruples. He convinced his uncle to let him go to Egypt to appease the king, and was given money for expenses from government funds. With this money, he first bought lavish gifts to win over the king's messenger so he could obtain an extension of time to pay the taxes. Then he went to the Kussim, with whom he was very friendly, and negotiated an enormous loan. When he went down to Egypt, he had enough money to buy lavish gifts for the king and his ministers, and also to purchase the concession of collecting the taxes in the land of Yehuda. Of course, a tax collector needs a police force behind him, so the king supplied him with an army of three thousand soldiers to help him collect the taxes. He returned to Eretz Yisroel with an army behind him. The first place he went to collect taxes was the city of Aza. He demanded that they pay seven times the original amount of the tax. The people there did not respond to this request, so he took ten of their leaders and had them hanged. He also robbed the citizens of their money. The news spread across the land, and the people were terrified. From then on, whenever Yosef approached a city, the people came out to greet him with the tax money in advance. In this manner, he gained control over the entire Eretz Yisroel. All of Yosef's assistants became very wealthy, and they became the ruling upper class among the Jewish people.

The Misyavnim

Yosef and his followers became the first Misyavnim. The word “Misyavnim” means “people who make themselves into Greeks.” These Jews longed to be part of the Greek culture, and live the same lifestyle as the Greeks. They cast away observance of Torah and mitzvos in order to live their lives like their gentile conquerors. When the Jews had lived under the Babylonians and the Persians, they never tried to assimilate into these cultures. The Babylonians and Persians were coarse, rude people, in whom there was nothing to admire. Not so the Greeks. Greek culture was very aesthetic and attractive. The Greek language was very beautiful. In this language, they wrote poetry and ballads about their heroes. They staged plays and sang songs of bravery. The Greeks were experts in architecture and built magnificent buildings. They revered physical beauty, especially the human body. The men spent their days in gymnasiums in sports, games and body-building.

The Greeks worshipped many gods. They attributed to their gods all the faults that humans can have. Their gods were immoral, and fought in rivalry over girlfriends. They robbed, lied, and deceived one another. It goes without saying that, if the Greeks imagined their gods behaving this way, they would not hesitate to act this way themselves. They had no guilty conscience when they did something wrong, because their belief did not teach right and wrong, only indulgence. Such a lifestyle is tempting to people. Although every person has the capacity for greatness and nobility, there is also a side of the human personality which longs for a life of indulgence without restrictions.

Violence and Corruption

Chazal tell us that enemies that come from outside are not nearly as harmful as those that come from within the Jewish people. The Misyavnim were not content to live their lives unhindered by the restrictions of their ancient faith. They wanted to take control of the whole country, and force everyone else to live as they themselves desired to live. They accomplished this through the influence they gained by giving significant bribes to the king in Syria. In the long period between the appearance of the first Misyavnim and the war of Chanukah, life as an observant Jew became increasingly difficult. These evil, power-hungry Jews manipulated the Syrian-Greek kings to give them control over the nation, and particularly over the Bais Hamikdash. The position of Kohen Gadol was sold to the highest bidder, regardless of how corrupt an individual he was. They introduced foreign innovations into the Bais Hamikdash and Yerushalyim. The atmosphere in the Jewish land rapidly deteriorated to be more Greek-like than Jewish. Any resistance from the G-d fearing tzadikim was put down by brutal force. This was the situation even before the beginning of Antiochus' reign.

Antiochus

Antiochus would not have forced the Jews to forsake the Torah of his own accord. It was the Misyavnim who incited him to do so. The real enemies in the story of Chanukah were the Misyavnim, even more than the Greeks. A very corrupt individual from the Misyavnim purchased the appointment of Kohen Gadol through a massive bribe. The king then gave him control of the entire land. The Sanhedrin was stripped of all its power, and the Misyavnim went all out to desecrate everything holy to the Jewish people. At the insistence of the new Kohen Gadol, a gymnasium was built right near the Har Habayis, where young kohanim were encouraged to spend their days in body building and sports competitions, rather than studying the avodah. Soon a feud arose, and a new Kohen Gadol (who was not even a Kohen) was appointed. It was only then, in 3616 (140 BCE), that Antiochus began making decrees against mitzvah observance.

Mesirus Nefesh for Mitzvos

There were three years during which the korban tamid was not brought at all. In addition, there were numerous decrees the Yevanim instituted to prevent Bnai Yisroel from doing mitzvos. Many courageous and pious Jews made every effort to circumvent these decrees. When the king forbade bringing bikurim to the Bais Hamikdash, Jews loaded their wagons with bikurim covered with dried figs to conceal the bikurim. When the guards on the highways asked them where they were going, they responded that they were going to the pressing house to press the dried figs into round cakes. The guards let them through, and they brought their bikurim to the Bais Hamikdash. When the Yevanim decreed that no one was permitted to bring wood for the mizbeach, they made the wood into ladders and pretended they were going to pigeon coops in the area. When they got through, they took the ladders apart and brought the wood to the Bais Hamikdash. Both of these exploits are remembered in the Kinos we read on Tisha B'av.

The Yevanim decreed that no one may perform a bris milah, on pain of death. Many Jews risked their lives, and indeed many lost their lives, performing this precious mitzvah. They had to do it secretly, and devised various methods of letting people know there was to be a bris. In some places, they lit candles, (which is the reason there is a minhag to light candles at a bris). In other places, they would make noise with a grinder to grind the medicine powders that would be sprinkled on the baby's wound.

Some Jews chose death rather than surrender their faithfulness to Hashem. Megilas Antiochus is a historical document written about Chanukah. It is recorded there that when the Yevanim decreed that every Jew must openly break the Shabbos, one thousand Jews went to hide in a cave. The Misyavnim tattled on them, and troops were dispatched to the opening of the cave. The Jews were given the choice of compliance or death, and they all chose death. (This was halachically correct, because in a time of forced conversion, one is obligated to give up one's life.)

When the Yevanim saw that the Jews were not buckling under, they made new and even harsher decrees. They did not allow any Torah study, and they interfered with Jewish family life. Life became basically unbearable for anyone who wanted to keep mitzvos.

Matisyahu and His Sons

Matisyahu, son of Yochanan (a former Kohen Gadol), was already a very old man at the time of the war of Chanukah. He and his five sons were hiding in the village of Modeyin. Their distress over what was happening knew no bounds. Matisyahu secretly sent his son Yehudah through all the Jewish cities to gather all who feared Hashem, with the ancient battle cry, "Whoever is for Hashem come to me!" A group of the devoted ones came with him back to the village, and Matisyahu blessed them and encouraged them. He told them to daven to Hashem and to fight against their enemies.

The treacherous Misyavnim informed the government of an impending rebellion, so they sent an army to Modeyin to forcibly convert Matisyahu and his followers to their idolatry. When they arrived, they built an altar to the Greek god and commanded that a pig should be offered up on it. They asked Matisyahu to be the first, but he refused, saying, "You do what your king commands you, and we will do what our King commands us."

One of the wayward Jews now slaughtered the chazir and brought it up on the altar. Matisyahu was enraged, and zealously acted for the kavod of Hashem. He and his sons pulled out small swords that they had concealed under their garments. Matisyahu jumped onto the altar and chopped off the head of the Jew who had offered the sacrifice. Then he proceeded to kill the commanding Greek officer. The rebellion was on! Matisyahu and his sons attacked the Greek army so fearlessly, and killed so many, that the rest ran away. Matisyahu broke apart the altar, and proclaimed, "Whoever cares about the Torah of G-d, and upholds His covenant, should come and join me." Matisyahu lived only one year after the beginning of the rebellion. Before his death, he appointed his son Yehuda to lead the war effort.

A Long War

There were many episodes of attacks by the massive armies of the Yevanim, compared to the very small group of Chashmonaim. The help from Hashem was unmistakable and miraculous. Just as we say in Al Hanisim, it was "the mighty in the hands of the weak and the many into the hands of the few." After much fighting, the Jews were finally able to reach the Bais Hamikdash and cleanse it from the mess that the Yevanim had wrought there.

The miracle of the oil is well known to all Jews, young and old. However, we need to understand why this miracle was necessary. The general rule is that Hashem does not want the world to run miraculously, and only performs a miracle when there is a dire need. Was it really necessary for Hashem to make a miracle so that they could light the Menorah all that week? What would have happened if they would have had to wait another week until they could produce a fresh supply of oil? After all, the Menorah hadn't been lit for so long! Was it pikuach nefesh that it be lit during that week?! There is a very important message here, one of the most fundamental messages of the Yom Tov of Chanukah.

The war of Chanukah was not fought for independence from foreign rule. Eretz Yisroel had already been under the dominion of alien rulers for almost three hundred years, since the fall of the First Bais Hamikdash. It was fought exclusively so that Yidden could continue to learn Torah and keep mitzvos, just as they had always done since Matan Torah at Har Sinai.

The family of Matisyahu and their followers had been moser nefesh al kiddush Hashem. They spared no effort, and no sacrifice was too great. Their comforts, their possessions, and even their very lives were all secondary to their desire for k'vod Shomayim. They gave their all, and held nothing back. They deserved a heavenly sign of approval. The oil of the Menorah symbolizes the light of Torah, which was precisely what they had preserved with their superhuman sacrifices. In response, Hashem also did something He generally prefers not to do; He made a miracle to show them how great was their z'chus in preserving the Torah for all future generations.

One of the greatest lessons we can learn from Chanukah and the Chashmonaim is that we should always do our utmost for kiddush Hashem. This should be first and foremost in our minds, in all that we do. Then Hashem will bless our efforts, and we will be zocheh to the final geula, when we will all join to greet Moshiach Tzidkainu. Amen!

The Ani Maamin Foundation

This essay is part of the activities of the Ani Maamin Foundation. Ani Maamin's goal is to spread chizuk in emunah in our Torah world to educators, parents and children alike. By creating audio and written materials that show how compelling our emunah really is, we hope to bring about a heightened awareness and clarity in emunah to bnei Torah everywhere.
